Love Ain't Enough

Director: Dustin Grella | Country: USA

Synopsis:

A breathtaking exercise in fluidity, the Barr Brothers' new video for Sleeping Operator single "Love Ain't Enough" features a non-stop barrage of elegant, animated scenes.

Animated and directed by Dustin Grella, the clip utilizes 50 cardboard cut-outs and 15 paintings to help set the scene for the folksy rock tune. Along the way, we witness a fine-lined human silhouette walking across a series of colourful backdrops, tropical plains being navigated through said cut-outs, a calming, magenta-tinted fetal-position scene, and the star-spangled bodies of newborns.

Fisherwoman and Tuk Tuk

Director: Suresh Eriyat | Country: India

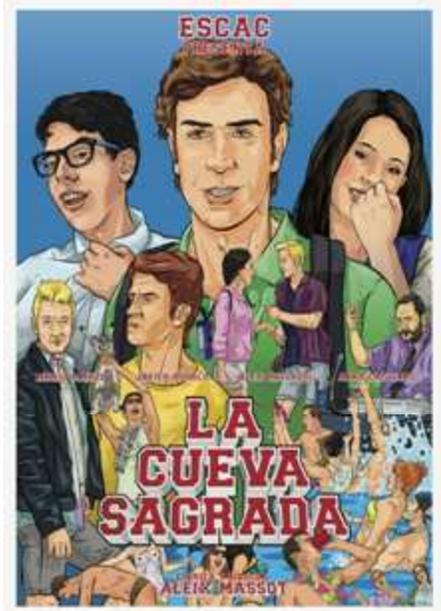

Synopsis:

Set in a coastal village, where the heat of the Indian summers, the stench of dried fish, the triumph of human endeavor against odds, the thrill of adventure, the over excited colors and loud music that blankets the solitude weave a story of a lonely fisherwoman who lives her dreams through her hard earned Tuk-tuk.

Tuk-tuk becomes more of a partner than a mere material possession for her. Driving around in the Tuk-tuk releases her from the drudgery of mundane life. An unforeseen turn of events brings this love story to an abrupt end, though the happiness from its memories dawns a beginning making the end meaningful.

The Box

Director: Ramesh Devu | Country: India

Synopsis:

Short Animation film "The Box" is about listening, listening to one's own listening. When this listening cannot be listened, then one is not present to life. Listening is a new faculty of awareness, one has to nurture carefully, so that one becomes fluent to look at the listening in every direction. It is very important to give that space to listen to the listening carefully, naturally, peacefully, and being present. By being present to the listening one can liberate oneself and beings around them. That's how powerful the listening is and how the listening can liberate one. And it's not about listening to others, but to one's own listening.
