Director: Solvan Naim | Country: USA

The film is a holistic exploration into the elements that create a young street soldier: his family, his neighborhood, his community, his school friends and teachers. Although the subject matter is serious and grounded in the realities of America’s modern day inner-cities - the tone of the film balances the true grittiness of New York with the natural levity, and universal accessibility, of being a teenager. Viewers will see the brutality of Stanhope’s work, but we will also see the childhood innocence he has not yet lost. Far more than a film about a child killer, Stanhope speaks to the larger universal conversation of how socio-economics can fail our children on all levels, around the world.
