Activist Aria: More Perfect Union

Gail Simpson/ United States/Documentary Short/
6/English/2021

Created during Covid lock-down while the US convulsed over the death of George Floyd, the BLM protests and a toxic Presidential race, Opera Frontier rewrote the lyrics to a frothy Strauss aria to reflect America's profound and self-evident need to be "more perfect". Initially contrasting the familiar narrative of "America the Beautiful" with searing images of centuries of injustice, the piece concludes by highlighting the diversity and strength of those who have successfully championed human rights and by calling all of us to responsible action.

Shades Of (Baby) Pink

Neelima Gudavalli/ India/Short Fiction/ 33/Telugu/2021

“This story has two parallel threads. Emotional Journey of 5 years old child and his ability to question back when elders try to divert his emotions or his emotions being brushed off

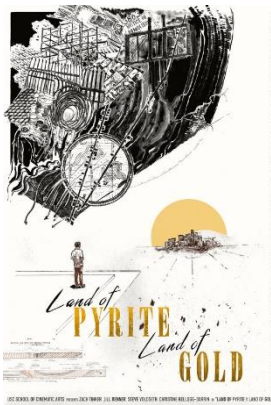

Most of households in India for that matter Asia experience this situation with children today as parents leave their children with grandchildren and migrate to Western countries for better career prospects and for better living. Most often in this situation every one of them will be affected emotionally. Parents for leaving their child, Child missing his/her parents, Grandparents living all alone in old age taking care of sick and depressed grandchildren.

Emotional stress primarily from child point of view as well as emotional stress that parents and grandparents undergo is better reflected in this movie

This story also depicts how child effectively uses the advice, ideas, distraction techniques used on him by his grandparents to convince them back and to help himself by figuring out solution. Often as elders we figure out solution by ourselves when we pass through emotional stress and peaks of it. Even child does the same. For most of problems, child will figure out solutions in their own creative way although often those gets unnoticed or taken as fun act by elders”

“How long does it take for your mind to turn against the same love it once cherished? Devika fell in love with Basit with the very first word he spoke when he visited her art gallery. To sound formal, she informed him that he would need at least 14 paintings to get exhibited in the gallery but all he wanted was to have a cup of tea with her.

She found him intriguing in a way that he could read her eyes, and tell her things about herself which no one was supposed to know. She couldnâ€™t refuse when he called her in the middle of night to show her something he had drawn. It turned out to be her painting, but different. Devika, in the painting, was the one she aspired to be, unrelenting, wild and open to the world. They made love that night and for almost a year they were inseparable.

But slowly the same qualities which she admired about Basit, started haunting her. He could tell what she is thinking and she despised the thought of him having that kind of a control on her. She was now pondering about the price she was paying for being his inspiration. On the other hand, Basit could tell how she was falling apart, without her talking about it. Basit needed minimum of 14 paintings to get exhibited. He had completed 11 paintings but the last three were about to come at a huge price for him too.

The story takes us further into the next two years of their relationship, the cycle of beginning and end to something beautiful; something we remember like a dream, in this case, a colorful one. “

Manhoos

Prinkesh Prajapati/ India/Short Fiction/
16/Hindi/2021

“Our first introduction to the film is by way of a voiceover – a woman sharing her life and experiences. Her relationship with her father is marked by deep love, nearly making up for the absent love of the mother she lost during her birth. Layer by layer, the story is revealed as one of sexual assault, abduction, parting and the longing for a loved one.

All of these events are allowed to unfold along with the poetic voiceover, consistently maintaining its rhyme and rhythm. However, where will fate truly lead a father who is looking for his missing daughter? Will they ever meet again, and if yes, would that union be a lasting one?

As for the title of the film, Manhoos or the unfortunate one, is it truly the protagonist who is unfortunate or is it the situations in a society that have led her to this point? The film raises all of these questions, providing its own somber answers for each one of them.”

Opang

Sanjay Bhattacharya/Short
Fiction/India/23/English, Nepali/2021

“Opang is a story from a time when the world witnessed the deadliest clash of the greatest powers around the globe. The horizon was veiled with black demonic smokes from the manmade weapons, designed to annihilate mankind. The houses were left empty, the young blood was summoned to the frontiers. Mother earth wept for her children.

The story revolves around a small village at the foot of the mountains by the border area where just a few old men and women could be spotted as the rest of them were called to the frontiers to serve their nation. There lived our main character a 12year old boy who lived in a small wooden house at the end of the village with an attached post office. He lived with his father, but now he was left alone as his father was taken away to serve the nation. His father was the only person in the village who could read and write, now he was the only one who could do the same.

The boy had to step into his father’s shoes both literally and figuratively by wearing the postmaster’s uniform and imitating his gestures. Every Saturday an army bike arrives to deliver a bunch of letters to their village post office. Because of the absence of his father, the young boy had to deliver the letters on his behalf. The letters that came were mostly death certificates for the families of the deceased from the government. But when the boy read out the letters he fabricated them and used his own imagination to hide the horrendous truth from their families. He brought to them nothing but Hope in a time of hopelessness. After every delivery, he was rewarded with a piece of loaf that helped him to survive.

While following this daily routine he got acquainted with a dog. He noticed that the dog was living alone in a house, whose master must have gone to the battlefield. As time passed, the boy tried to build a friendship with the dog as even he was lacking companionship. But every time he tried to get close, he failed. But that didn’t stop him. He called her by a different name every time they met, hoping for a response that never came his way.

Then he started offering her food, he dropped pieces of bread and in front of the dog and left only to notice that the food was gone after some time. It made him happy to believe that they were getting closer after every encounter.

Suddenly, one cold night the village was almost demolished but continuous air raids, causing death and destruction all over the place.

	James Breitenstein/Germany/Music Video/6/German/2021 The music video of Julia Vitalis – „Female Fortitude“ – was sponsored by the Culture Foundation of Hessen/ Germany (HKST) in 2020 and realized in spring 2021. The shooting took place outdoors in central Germany. With unique intensity and complex symbolism, the video expresses the essence of female power around the issues of birth, death, connection to the earth, unity with all living creatures, and the connection between the monthly cycle of menstruation, the tides, and the moon. The deeper layers of consciousness explored in this film are a positive reappraisal of womanhood on all levels, skillfully juxtaposed to ongoing, millennia-long oppression. It works to support a latent ability to break out of cyclical victimization and transforms it into resilient self-empowerment. Nature, the moon and 13 goddess symbols are the main characters. Furthermore, the video is continuously developed as a participative web project. The text of the song is provided as a free download in German and English, as well as audio- and text files. There is no commercial interest, only in the support of international women’s empowerment. The goal is to translate it into as many languages as possible that women, worldwide...

It was not until the industrial revolution when the global population of this earth apart to one billion marks. That human become harness the energy, from coil, letter gas and finally oil. It was directly result of burning these fossil fuels that human activity becomes an impact to global weather patterns. A term which refer to today as anthropogenic climate change. Government need to plan ahead so they can reduce impact the climate change is having on our every day lives. This work has on a particular urgency as climate change is accelerating. If we want to know the problem of overpopulation, then we have to know the numbers of people who can live comfortably, sustainable on this earth. Before we can estimate this figure we need to firstly compare the amount of resources which each one of us requires in order to survive and prosper. Data collected by the United Nations can be analysed to basic annual indices. Firstly the world's input i.e. what the earth can generate from the sun's energy, this known as biocapacity, and then secondly the Output i.e. what we are consuming, which is termed as ecological footprint. For the earth to be in a sustainable state the input must be equal or greater than the output.

We know this because if we plot total biocapacity against the total global footprint over time on a graph these lines cross in the early 70's. When the world's population was 3.7 billion. Put more simply this means we would need to at least halve our global population. In order for the earth to regain a sustainable state, and also to attempt some sort of climatic normality. If we really want to improve the outcome of this planet then scientists and concerned people should become more outspoken by encouraging the political economic symposium to accept the outcome in a positive way and plan this impartially. However, it is hoped, that if science is correct then this will bring irrefutable evidence to enhance pressure on government to act...
